Preface

This is a study of the Gramophone Company's prestige celebrity series of double-sided records made by artists in Europe or by the Victor Talking Machine Company (later RCA Victor) in the United States. Readers may be surprised by the extent to which the company – also known as His Master's Voice (HMV) – relied on its American partner, particularly for concerto and symphonic recordings. In exchange, of course, many Victor issues bear the "Recorded in Europe" entry on labels, as well as an embossed matrix number which identifies an HMV recording.

The idea of issuing prestige recordings with red labels began in Russia and was adopted by the London head office for use throughout Europe. So, for example, all of the company's Enrico Caruso records made either in Italy or America had red labels. The distinction between red ("prestige") and black ("ordinary") labels was continued by giving the Celebrity Series of DA (ten-inch) and DB (twelve-inch) prefixed issues red labels, although some artists such as Adelina Patti and Nellie Melba insisted on being given different colors, a sort of "super-status." The introduction of the DA/DB series was delayed on the apparent basis that it was inappropriate to issue records by celebrity artists such as Caruso in a double-sided format. The logic of this approach is not altogether clear, but the fact is that the first DA/DB couplings were not put onto the market until the 1920s. It is possible that contracts describing performers' royalties may have been a factor that accounted for the delay.

One point should, perhaps, be emphasized: the records in the new DA/DB series were intended as prestige issues but also as International ones. For that reason, decisions as to who and what should be listed in these series were reserved to the head office in England. Generally, the color of the label and whether it was appropriate for issue on DA/DB came down to the identity of the artists. In some cases (Lauritz Melchior comes to mind), individual decisions were required to be made, and why the Meistersinger Quintet (with Melchior) was issued on black label D2002 but his recording of Prize Song from Die Meistersinger made at the same May 16, 1931 session was given red label status on DB1858 remains unclear.

That leads to a characteristic of the DA/DB format: the same number would be used in all countries in which the record was issued: DB1858 was a universal HMV number, while D2002 was replaced by AW289, EJ69, and ES761, depending on the country of issue. To every rule there are exceptions: Australia, Austria, and Germany issued some DA/DB issues in their own local numerical series, and the Irish IR/IRX series included a number of DA/DB issues.

About sixty years ago, two gentlemen, John R. Bennett and Eric Hughes, described the "His Master's Voice" DA/DB records in The International Red Label Catalogue (Books 1 and 2). The books did not contain much detail, nor were the listings complete, but they were very helpful guidebooks for collectors. The preface was written by a young man named Alan Kelly.

Kelly became one of the most prolific discographers of all time, and during his career he located and produced detailed data for many of the records found in the Bennett/Hughes books. Curiously, he never produced a red label discography, nor did he compile an Irish catalog.

Many of Kelly's files were used to compile these discographies, and several other people made important contributions. David Mason provided a great deal of information about the Irish series that Kelly never listed. The Gramophone company's plant in Ireland reportedly burned down and some of the records pressed there are either scarce or non-existent. Many of the IR and IRX records, especially those by John McCormack, were reissues of DA or DB series releases.

John Milmo provided additional detail, particularly in relation to recordings made by HMV, and he was happy to accept John Bolig's offer to name him as co-author. That way each of us can take the credit and pass the blame for errors and omissions onto the other. One of the more interesting contributions was an inventory by Malcolm Walker of many of the DA and DB records that are housed in the EMI Archive. Walker examined copies of the records and listed information found on the labels and record surfaces. While doing so, he described some records that were never listed by Kelly or anybody else in our experience.

Several other people made valuable contributions. Alain Delot added information for records made in France and René Aagaard added information about post-July 1934 Danish recordings, as did Peter Adamson, who also agreed to vet this narrative and we have accepted most if not all of his suggestions. We also benefited from information from a number of other collectors and dealers over the years without now being able to recall who told us what: our thanks go to all of them, and we hope they will look not unkindly at the absence of individual credits.

It is very important to note that HMV and Victor had a symbiotic relationship, and they had contracts with virtually every significant classical performer or performing group in the first half of the 20th century. The records are sought after by collectors and by scholars, and many of the recordings may never be surpassed in their interpretations of works by the world's greatest composers. Many of those artists started their recording careers with other companies and jumped at the chance to record for HMV/Victor. The royalties and the prestige were too appealing to resist.

A large number of Victor recordings were issued by HMV, and John Bolig was able to assemble all of the Victor data with a little help from his friends. Both of us are very grateful to Sam Brylawski, the late Mike Panico, the late Jack Pfeiffer, Ward Marston, Vince Giordano, Allan Sutton, and David Seubert for efforts that they made on John Bolig's behalf.

We make a joint apology to John Bolig's friends in Canada and the U.K. because he saved himself hundreds of typewritten strokes by using American English instead of typing words like "catalogue" or "colour." Meanwhile, John Milmo was using British English and doing the opposite. We hope that all readers have a sense of humour, if not of humor.

His Master's Voice – A Brief History

We make no pretense of being historians. Dr. Peter Martland's Recording History – The British Record Industry, 1888-1931 is the source that should be examined for an understanding of the creation and development of the Gramophone Company – also known as the Gramophone and Typewriter Limited, and as His Master's Voice, but affectionately known as HMV. We are happy to report that Dr. Martland reviewed an early draft of these remarks and corrected some historical inaccuracies.

We also benefited greatly from some last-minute editing and historical perspective provided by Peter Adamson. Based on his review of a draft of this introductory material, we clarified some remarks we made about technical issues. We also toned down some of our unproven claims – especially those made by Bolig.

At the time of the Gramophone Company's founding, there were two types of records, and manufacturers competed for dominance. Thomas Edison had invented the phonograph, a machine that recorded and played records in the form of cylinders. The Gramophone founders decided to go with the second format that came in the form of a disc. That format had been invented by Emile Berliner and it had some advantages over cylinders. Pressing discs was far easier than manufacturing cylinders, and the discs did not take up nearly as much space on people's shelves.

Both formats were recorded acoustically: recordings were made mechanically without any electrical or electronic modification or enhancement. The performer stood in front of a horn and other musicians were placed near the horn. A master could not be edited; if it was flawed, a second or third "take" would be made. The earliest recordings used an etched zinc process; they could be played back immediately after being made so artists could be repositioned or any defects could be identified and remedied by repeating the recording. There was no standard speed for making recordings and the variations ranged from 60 to 100 revolutions per minute. Eventually, a playing speed of 78 revolutions per minute (78rpm) was established as the ideal recording speed, but it was rarely accomplished during the early years when the recording process was mechanical. (This problem will be addressed later.)

When the Johnson wax process was introduced in 1900, record quality was significantly improved, but at a cost: playing a recording before it had been processed destroyed the recording so an artist who wanted to listen to his or her voice for the first time had to be prepared to repeat the record. The process was crude and it avored male singers and violins. Some instruments, and large groups could not be recorded, and we don't know what some famous sopranos really sounded like.

When the approved "master" recording wore out, the artists had to return to the studio and make another version. If it was anticipated that a particular title by a particular artist was likely to be a good seller HMV's practice was to ask him or her to make additional recordings which could be issued if and when the first became unsatisfactory. And, to make life more difficult, the public had not grown enthusiastic about the record industry regardless of the format choice. In 1902 the Victor Company created a process that enabled them to make an infinite number of stampers, and they could produce a large number of records very quickly. HMV was using this process in January 1903. The problem of recording large groups was not resolved until electrical recording methods were perfected in the early 1920s.

The company had for some years used the image of an angel ("the recording angel") as a trademark, and although it owned the rights to Francis Barraud's painting His Master's Voice, HMV did not adopt it as its trademark until 1908. In Russia, dogs were not regarded with the same affection as in the West, so the angel remained in use as the Russian HMV trademark until the Russian Revolution – but it was called "Amour," a cupid, because the Russian Orthodox Church objected to the depiction of angels on records. Eventually, the words "His Master's Voice" were printed on the labels in French, Italian, Spanish, and other languages. It was a company with many names with representation in many countries.

Gramophone had offices in most of the major cities in Europe, including Milan, where in March 1902 it became aware of a young tenor who was creating a sensation. They engaged him to make ten records and they sent an engineer named Fred Gaisberg to do the job. Gaisberg did not do a particularly good job, and two of the recordings had to be repeated the next time, but the ten records became a huge success. The tenor's name was Enrico Caruso and his voice was ideally suited for the early recording processes. People started buying his records and the machines to play them on, and that ensured the success of Gramophone & Typewriter Limited. By the beginning of 1903, the disc record could be manufactured quickly and cheaply, and artists who had been reluctant to make records noticed that Caruso had become famous and prosperous. One by one, they gravitated toward the G&T studios. In the meantime, copies of some of the G&T stampers were sent to America and Victor released them in March 1903. As a result, Caruso became a celebrity there before he ever visited New York and the Metropolitan Opera House.

Introduction to the Discography

Fortunately for discographers, a great deal of information about recording sessions has been preserved and archived. There are some gaps in the data, however. To date, the discography of HMV records made in Spain is incomplete. There are gaps in data for records made in Germany and in Italy, particularly during World War II. The Berlin offices were bombed in late 1943, destroying documentation, equipment, and the ability to make records. That sounds like a Wagnerian tragedy, doesn't it?

Alan Kelly compiled extensive lists of data for his HMV discographies, but he sometimes made conflicting entries if a record was issued with alternate catalog numbers. His spelling of some titles also varied from one entry to another. We have tried to correct and standardize his entries, but inconsistencies remain and, on occasion, we found it necessary to include alternative titles.

Fortunately, almost all of the Victor recording data still exist and can be found at the archives of Sony Music Entertainment, Victor's successor company, in New York City. Included are ledgers describing recordings made by performers at each session, index cards describing which takes were issued, and large books in which catalog numbers were listed as soon as a recording was selected for release. The index cards were also used to describe recordings imported from the Gramophone Company and were often more accurate than the listing made by Alan Kelly.

As part of this discography, a major effort was made to identify the actual musical selection and the full names of lyricists, composers, and performers who can be heard on the records. We included the date, the recording site, and alternate catalog numbers for records that were released more than once or in different countries. We considered the identification of musical selections to be especially important because record companies often provided short titles on the labels of their records. A title such as "Schubert's Serenade" or "Beethoven's 5th Symphony – Part 1" seemed to beg for expansion to enable a music student or scholar to identify what was actually on the record. In short, your label may differ in some way from what we have prepared, and we modestly consider our work to be an improvement.

We are aware that some discographers prefer to list composers' names first, followed by the names of lyricists or arrangers. In this discography, the composer's name appears last, along with any international numbers that identify their compositions.

From time to time, mistakes were made on record labels and in catalogs. We have sought to note such errors, but others may have eluded us. One of HMV's greatest gaffes was to issue Nellie Melba's Victor recording of "Depuis le jour" with Lucrezia Bori's name on the label (2033046). Melba was not best pleased and the record had to be reissued with a corrected label as 2-033076. We have also seen records with the same label on both sides despite the selections sounding quite different. The people who pressed the records worked in hot conditions for long hours and presumably for low pay. A few mistakes were to be expected.

It is also noteworthy that some of the recordings were transcribed or altered in some fashion. From 1902 to 1925 records were not altered, but some were copied to create a new set of stampers. This was done by playing a record in front of a recording horn, or by copying a record using a device with two styli – at one end there was a stylus to play the record and at the other end there was a second stylus to inscribe the vibrations from the record to a new wax matrix. Victor marked transcribed acoustic records with the symbol S/8 stamped to the left of the label and it is assumed that those records were copied with a pantograph process. One reason given for transcribing the early recordings is that HMV and Victor had different standards for the depth and shape of the grooved area.

With the introduction of microphones and electrically made recordings in 1925, it became possible to engineer or to alter a recording in an effort to enhance its quality. The results may have been commercially worthwhile, but the result was often dishonest.

In the 1930s, many of Caruso's recordings, and two recordings made by Luisa Tetrazzini, were re-recorded with symphony orchestras that were vastly better than the small instrumental groups that had originally accompanied them. The results were mixed, but the records sold well, and engineering had become a creative process.

Many of the records that were transcribed or modified are identified in the discography. The collector or scholar is advised to have an open mind about transcribed versions. It is reasonable to assume that something that could be heard in the original version may have been lost.

His Master's Voice Records and Record Numbering Conventions

As mentioned previously, at different times the Gramophone Company had several different names. The public called the company HMV. HMV had an agreement with its American affiliate: Victor made records in North and South America, a few Caribbean and Pacific islands, China, and Japan; HMV made records everywhere else in the world. HMV had a cadre of skilled engineers who dragged equipment to exotic places to make recordings. We know the names of those engineers and we have lists of the work they did.

There were several major recording sites and HMV catalog numbers were used to identify recordings in English, Russian, French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch. Central European languages were in a separate catalog. The language convention was interesting. For example, somebody recording an Italian song while in London would have an Italian catalog number assigned to their record.

After the creation of EMI in 1931, certain HMV branches were given greater autonomy. This had a particular effect on the DA/DB catalogs: no longer was the head office at Hayes solely responsible for what was issued in red label DA/DB format, and each such branch was given a block of numbers for its own use. Unfortunately, the law of unintended consequences resulted in duplication of catalog numbers during WWII when some branches were unable to have contact with Hayes and issued records bearing catalog numbers which had already been used elsewhere and for quite different artists/titles. The areas of duplication will be found in the Summary Table Appendix, which also notes the numbers allocated to new International issues where each issuing branch retained the designated DA/DB number.

We also added instructions in the discography advising the user where to look for duplicated catalog numbers when a sequence was repeated in one country or another.

The second consequence of granting branches increased autonomy was that the same record may be found with a DA/DB number and red label in one country and a different number and label color, generally plum or black, in another. We have attempted to ensure that all such variant numbers are entered in the DA/DB lists. We may have missed a few.

We also need to note that the Spanish branch in Barcelona elected to issue a number of its DA/DB records with blue labels. Some of the selections were not performed by celebrated performers and some do not seem to be “classical.” From our perspective, the essential element is the record prefix rather than the color of the label. If it carries a DA/DB number, it should find a place in our lists regardless of label color. At the same time, some branches elected to give some of their domestic recordings red labels but with catalog numbers not in a DA/DB series; these will fall outside our scope.

The First DA/DB Issues and the End of the 78rpm Era

In 1924 HMV issued a “Double-Sided Celebrity Records” catalog (available to download from the URL sounds.bl.uk). It contains details of all DA/DB releases up to March 31, 1924 and runs to 100 pages. All entries relate to recordings made between 1902 and 1924 and previously issued in single-sided form. In both series, the numbering starts at 100. (DB 1-20 were used by the Copenhagen branch for some wartime issues in Denmark.)

Once the double-sided red label records in the DA/DB series were accepted by the public, the company began to issue all new records in the Celebrity Series as DA/DB and no further single-sided classical records were issued except when a set was issued with an uneven number of sides.

In June 1958, HMV announced that all 78s would be deleted from the catalog on June 30, 1958 and an era came to an end: “As the demand for these records is now virtually non-existent it has been decided to delete them.” Victor and HMV had already been issuing transcribed versions of some of their 78rpm records on the new 45rpm and long-playing (LP) formats. The demand for outstanding performances had not subsided, merely the demand for the 78rpm format.

Matrix Data

When an artist made a record, a matrix number was assigned to the original wax recording.

Victor matrix numbers come in three parts – a prefix, a matrix number, and a take number. HMV had a number of different matrix numbering systems. In the early years, HMV recording engineers kept track of the artists that they recorded, and rather than assigning take numbers, they simply used a fresh matrix number when an artist repeated a selection. Prior to 1921 each size of record was in a separate numerical series. In that year there was a reorganization of matrix series, and HMV copied the Victor system in which recordings were listed in one numerical sequence, and an initial B or C was added to show whether the record was 10-inch or 12-inch.

In 1931 that system was replaced and 0 (zero) became the prefix for ten-inch masters and 2 became the prefix for twelve-inch masters, replacing B and C. New numerical sequences were introduced. In each, the second prefix letter identified the recording engineer. The location where the recording was made can be determined from a list of who was where and when.

The final reform to HMV's system occurred on August 1, 1934: 0 and 2 continued to show the size of the record, but they were followed by two letters identifying the branch of HMV with which the record was associated and generally in whose territory it had been made. During WWII the Berlin branch was allocated responsibility for recordings carried out in Vienna and Prague by Electrola, the German equivalent of HMV.

As confusing as the above description may be, the matrix number is important because it is as unique as a fingerprint. After the company started using take numbers, they became especially important because artists frequently recorded alternate versions of their selections, and it is not unusual for several different takes to have been issued.

HMV used Roman numerals to identify takes for several years. When they switched to numeric take numbers, they sometimes added a character to indicate that an alternate version was used or a transcribed version was used. For example, 1A indicates that there were two identical matrices, 1 and 1A, and 1A was used to press the records. HMV also used symbols such as 1T1 to indicate that a transcribed version was used to press the record.

They added a small ▲ to matrix numbers recorded electrically using the Westrex system on which a royalty was payable to Western Electric, but not to those made using the Blumlein system: Blumlein was an EMI employee to whom no royalty had to be paid. In 1934, when matrix numbers came to be entered on labels, neither the ▲ symbol nor the take number was included. These delta-shaped symbols are interesting, but they are not part of the actual matrix number.

There was no rule about how many takes an artist might make. Generally, HMV made two recordings of each title, presumably to provide a back-up if one proved less than satisfactory or was “damaged in bath” during processing at the factory. Some would wish or need to record the same title many times and select which take should be published; the unselected matrices were usually destroyed. One struggling Victor artist made at least 34 takes of the same aria (not all on the same day) before one was accepted for publication.

Artists often returned to a studio to make a better version of a title that they had recorded earlier, and collectors and scholars would probably want to hear all of the takes that were actually published. Because of the number of HMV recording engineers each using a different matrix series, repeat recordings of the same title are often in different series. If both were made at the same session (or a day or two later), they fall into the same series. If a different engineer made the later recording(s), they will appear in his series, not the original one. In the case of Victor, the same matrix number may have been used for titles repeated many years later, and it is the take number that is stamped on the record surface that is important.

From time to time, HMV would release a different take of an artist’s recording using the same catalog number. When they did that, the letter “x” was added to the single-sided number to indicate that a different version was in use. An “x” was not added to face or double-sided numbers, but the take numbers are visible on the record surface.

Record Surface Data

Some collectors place a higher value on a perfect label, but discographers place a higher value on markings embossed next to the labels on HMV and Victor records. The space between the end of a recording and the label is full of helpful data.

HMV records have information pressed above, below, and on both sides of their labels. One can find the catalog number, usually above the label, and the matrix number, usually below the label, on the space next to the grooved area. Another character may indicate which stamper was used to press the record. Some collectors want first editions of a pressed record, but there is no guarantee that a first edition is an ideal copy. It is reasonable to state that an early pressing from a fresh stamper would be superior to the 1000th pressing from the first stamper.

Victor matrix numbers appear on HMV records. They are usually prefixed with the letter A or 0A in place of the Victor prefixes to indicate an American origin. Later, from about 1942, the full Victor prefix was generally printed on HMV labels. The Victor take number was often pressed upside down to the right of the HMV label.

The label itself may contain the single-sided record number that had been used in earlier decades. This is helpful in identifying the language that can be heard on the record, and it ties the double-sided record to the earlier era. Similar “face” numbers continued to be applied by HMV up to August 1934, when they were abandoned. They appear both on the record label and in the wax, so it was only after August 1934 that matrix numbers began to appear on labels.

Stampers

Some collectors prefer pressings made from the first stamper. When HMV records were pressed, the company kept track of which stamper was in use. In the G&T (Gramophone and Typewriter Ltd) era, subsequent stampers were assigned Roman numerals and stampers starting with the number II were stamped next to the catalog number above the label. The absence of a Roman numeral on a G&T record would indicate that it is a first edition. Later, the company placed alphabetical stamper codes to the right of the label. For example, the letter G embossed at the 3 o’clock position represented a first edition stamper.

It is also noteworthy that the letters CO appear next to the label on some G&T record surfaces, indicating that a “copy matrix” was used. That merely means that the stamper was probably created from the original wax matrix rather than by the Johnson process that could create an infinite number of fresh stampers. The practice was discontinued in 1905.

There is no way of knowing how many copies could be made from a stamper. HMV and Victor had quality control measures and they did not hesitate to replace a worn stamper. As was suggested above, the first pressings from a new stamper would probably be better than late pressings made from the stamper that was replaced.

Label Colors

Almost all of the HMV labels are much more attractive than the Victor Red Seal pressings of the same performances. HMV also marketed celebrity recordings by ensembles and those are listed in this discography as records in the DJ, DK, DL, DM, DO, DQ, DR, and DS series. The labels for those series bear different label colors. All of the Irish IR and IRX records have red labels, and all of the VA and VB labels are white.

Additional Catalog Numbers

In addition to the historical 78rpm reissues described in this discography, many of the HMV listings were legally issued worldwide with different catalog numbers, and many DA/DB records were assigned different catalog numbers in Germany and in Australia. In addition, some HMV recordings were released in Russia after the Russian Revolution, but most of them appear to be transcribed piracies and they are not detailed here.

Victor affiliates in Buenos Aires and in Tokyo reissued some of the records with their own catalog numbers, as did the Canadian His Master's Voice Company. Several collectors' organizations privately produced some important reissues taken from original HMV metal parts. The International Record Collectors' Club (IRCC), the Historic Record Society (HRS), and Historic Masters contracted with record companies to have pressings made. IRCC and HRS had artists autograph the labels on many of them. HMV reissued records in its Archive series as well as in the Irish IR/IRX series described in this discography.

For more information about historic reissues, a book titled Seventy Years of Issues – Historical Vocal 78rpm Pressings from Original Masters by Tom Peel and John Stratton is an attractive and informative book and it features photographic images of the types of records that they describe. Mr. Peel's name appears on a number of Alan Kelly's discographies as a co-author.

A recent discovery was a bit of a surprise. There were records issued in Czechoslovakia after the Communists had taken over the government in that country. A number of His Master's Voice stampers were "nationalized" and pressed in the MD series. We have included mention of the ones that we were able to verify. They are, in all respects, excellent HMV-style records.

Limitations

We have some regrets. No one has compiled a complete HMV Spanish discography. Alan Kelly did not live long enough to complete and publish his own, though he distributed a draft. There are missing data in these studies and most of them relate to Spanish recordings. Other problems were caused by World War II: the destruction of masters and of documentation as well as the duplication of catalog numbers. Germany, Italy, and Switzerland regularly failed to send full details of their recordings to Gramophone headquarters in Hayes in Middlesex, England, so the EMI Music Archive at Hayes does not have full details.

Some data simply do not exist, and some records that were assigned catalog numbers were not released. We use abbreviations such as NL to indicate that information was not listed, and we use NR to indicate that a record was not released. We also use italics to indicate that a record was not released when we list alternate versions.

Where data are missing, John Bolig marked cells with missing or incomplete data in yellow and John Milmo has with varying degrees of success sought to find the relevant missing details. Anyone who finds a pressing which would enable us to add missing data is invited to contact one of us. For example, we did not want to assume that an orchestra accompanied an artist if we were not able to verify that data element.

Confirming matrix numbers is generally quite easy, but we may never be able to identify some recording dates.

Alan Kelly did not compile data for records made in Scandinavian countries. The data for records made there prior to 1934 were found in work compiled by Karleric Liliedahl, but the 1934-1957 Svenska Diskografier 11 only lists Swedish recordings, so we had to rely on data provided by others to fill the gaps in Danish and Norwegian recordings made after 1934. Furthermore, some of the Scandinavian catalog numbers duplicated those in use elsewhere. John Milmo and Peter Adamson added useful information about records made in Scandinavian countries after 1934, as did Bjorn Englund.

It is also a fact that some of the documents that we examined are over 100 years old and sometimes hard to decipher. Some of the take numbers or dates may be incorrect because discographers could not read them. In particular, it needs to be remembered that some dates in HMV documentation held in its archive may be the processing dates at one of their factories, not the date of the actual making of the recording.

Finally, there were HMV catalog numbers that were not used. It seems probable that they were intended to be used but, for one reason or another, were not. One example is DA5215, which was intended for two sides of an Olympic Hymn composed for the 1940 Tokyo Olympics – which did not take place. Matrix numbers were assigned, but the recordings were never made because of WWII, so DA5215 does not exist and neither do matrixes 0CS1596 or 0CS1597. We do list the unused numbers in the discography. In the Sony Archives, John Bolig was able to identify Victor numbers that were withdrawn; they are not important, but it would be interesting to know what they were.

HMV's allocation of a matrix number to a particular recording before it was made was not unusual after the mid-1930s. If the artist did not actually make the recording when he/she was due to do so, there will be a gap in the matrix series and, not infrequently, the unused number was used later either by the original artist for the original title or a completely different artist/title. There are a number of memoranda from Hayes instructing that no matrix number should be left blank. As a result, a later recording by artist B may turn up in the middle of an earlier series by artist A, with a much later recording date to fill the matrix number gap. It hardly needs to be emphasized that this can result in apparently odd recording dates – which are in fact quite accurate and not errors as might at first be supposed.

It will be seen that Germany reached the end of its original 12-inch allocation at DB5699. That happened during WWII when there was no contact between Germany and HMV's head office at Hayes. A unilateral decision was made by HMV's German branch "Electrola" to jump to DB7601, ignorant of the fact that Hayes had left its DB7000 automatic sequence open and with no final number. In consequence, the new German sequence DB7601-7720 in manual coupling duplicates part of the International Automatic DB7000 sequence.

Electrola created a further problem in exporting some of its records to Scandinavia during the war. Instead of pressing sets with appropriate new numbers, it pressed sets in automatic format but with their original manual coupling labels in place. They then put stickers over part of each, with the new automatic numbers therefore added to the original manual ones.

Automatic Couplings

Two different systems were used by HMV. The first involved pressing sides 1+4, 2+5, and 3+6 in a 6-side set. The user had to assemble the set with 1 at the bottom of the pile (so it was the first to hit the turntable) followed by 2 and then 3. That was known as the "Slide" system. The user then had to reorder the records with 4 at the bottom followed by 5 and 6. In 1933 the "Slide" system was replaced by "Drop," which involved coupling the sides in the order 1+6, 2+5, and 3+4. Having assembled the records as before, 1 and 2 with 3 at the top of the pile, all you needed to do when side 3 had played was to remove the pile, turn it over, and put it back on the spindle. It would then play 4, 5, and 6 with no need to reassemble the pile. It will be noticed that some early "Slide" automatic sets were reissued in "Drop" format – hence each record in the set will have 3 different numbers, one for manual coupling and the others for the two different automatic couplings.

Where a set involved more than 8 records (generally complete opera recordings), they were usually coupled in a series of segments because the spindle-based "Drop" auto-changers could not accommodate more than 8 records at one time. So, for example, Thomas Beecham's "Magic Flute" recording was split into segments of 5, 4, 5, and 3 records to separate the opera's two acts, although Act II could perfectly easily have been split 4+4 rather than 5+3. In Italy, Beniamino Gigli's "Andrea Chenier" recording (16 sides) was not segmented and sides 1+26 were coupled, so the user needed some skill in assembling his records to play in the correct sequence.

Many sets with an uneven number of sides were allocated another recording to fill what would otherwise have been a blank side. Where this was included when the set was issued in automatic form varied, but generally it came at the end (i.e., on the reverse of side 1).

For many years sets were issued in both manual and automatic couplings, until HMV announced in July 1950 that in future all 2-record (4-sided) sets would only be issued in automatic format.

About the Authors

John Bolig was the recipient of the Lifetime Achievement Award presented by the Association for Recorded Sound Collections in 2010. He and his wife, Darlene (“Cookie”), live in Dover, Delaware.

A companion book to the HMV Celebrity Series is in preparation. Bolig has described every Victor 78rpm Red Seal record made between 1903 and 1955. The work will be released as an e-book by UC Santa Barbara’s American Discography Project in 2020. The discography contains descriptions of records made by the Victor Talking Machine Company previously published in two volumes by Mainspring Press that are no longer in print. In addition, it contains descriptions of every Red Seal record made by RCA Victor from 1930 to 1955.

John Milmo claims that he failed to get into Oxford University because he spent his time reading Bauer’s Historical Records, but he subsequently graduated in Law from Trinity College Dublin and was called to the English bar and later became a Q.C. and Circuit Judge. His first discographical publication related to G&T matrix numbers and was published in The Record Collector in 1973 after the editor, James Dennis, had submitted it to Alan Kelly for peer review. It passed the test and after that he had a warm relationship with Alan, and between prosecuting, defending, and trying people accused of crime, he kept up his discographical work by accessing data which Alan was no longer able to do, but which resulted in their joint work on the HMV Bohemian (including Hungarian and Serb, Croat, and Romanian) catalog.

Since Alan Kelly’s death (and John’s own retirement), Milmo spent his time updating Kelly files both from material in the EMI Music Archive collection copied into microfilm format and held by the British Library (now his “home from home”), and by cross-referencing Kelly lists of matrix and catalog numbers and adding a wealth of entries provided by other selfless discographers. Currently, he has possession of Kelly’s discographical material.

Notes

The series listed in this discography are: ABHA, ABHB, AGSA, AGSB, DA, DB, DJ, DK, DL, DM, DO, DQ, DR, DS, IR, IRX, VA AND VB.

Missing or questionable data are marked in yellow - records marked NR were not released.

Records marked *, , t1, tr or s/8 were pressed from transcribed or re-recorded stampers.

Records in some sets are listed in the sequence intended for automatic record players.

HMV also listed many of these records in various other catalogs throughout the world.

Scandinavian countries sometimes added a letter such as DAN or DBN (Norway), but the record numbers follow international numbering conventions.

In America the Victor Company listed many of these records in their "Red Seal" series from 1903 to 1956.

In Germany many of the records were issued in their Schalplatte Gramophone and Kunstler Schallplatte Grammophon series (listed among alternative releases as SG and KSG).
