Preface

The Victor Company issued records with red labels from 1903 until the end of the 78rpm era in 1956, and facts about them are being described in this book. This is my second effort to describe some of these records. I had previously described recordings made by the Victor Talking Machine Company before it was purchased by The Radio Corporation of America and became RCA Victor. Despite the redundancy, I have made some improvements in the earlier listings. I made a special effort to identify the first and last names of everybody involved in writing lyrics, librettos, and compositions of each recording. In addition, I made frequent use of the computer database "IMSLP" – The International Music Score Library Project" – to identify composers' opus numbers and the tempi for movements in hundreds of musical compositions.

The Victor "Red Seal" label affixed to records represented the most prestigious recordings of highly skilled world-famous artists performing mostly classical music. The company charged premium prices for these records, and many of them are highly prized by collectors and studied by students and music scholars today. Many have been transcribed onto CDs and others are available on the internet.

A companion discography has also been created by myself and John Milmo that describes the double-sided 78rpm "Celebrity" records as made and issued by the Gramophone Company, better known as "His Master's Voice" or "HMV," in their sphere of influence throughout the world. Starting in 1901, the Victor Talking Machine Company and the Gramophone and Typewriter Company shared thousands of recordings. It was a symbiotic relationship, and it was highly successful.

It is noteworthy that both companies eventually used the same trademark, an image of a dog listening to a record being played on a record player with a brass horn. The image was entitled "His Master's Voice" and it appeared on records and other products produced by both companies. For over 60 years it was probably the most recognized trademark throughout the world.

The early history of the recording industry is a bit messy, and it has been that way just about every single year since Edison invented his phonograph over 140 years ago. There were two types of record available in 1901: the Edison-style cylinder and the Berliner-style disc. The cylinders had better sound quality than the discs, but they were expensive to produce, fragile, and they took up a great deal of space. The discs could be produced quickly and cheaply and, although somewhat fragile, they were easy to store in albums or on shelves.

It is entirely probable that the disc format would have prevailed without any outside interference, but the Gramophone and Typewriter Company had a stroke of luck, or genius, on April 11, 1902. They recorded a charismatic young tenor named Enrico Caruso in Milan, Italy, and his ten records, all operatic arias, created a sensation. The fact that an opera "star" was willing to make records lent dignity to the industry and to the disc record format. Within a year, the Victor Talking Machine Company was selling seven of those recordings in the United States. As a result, Caruso was a celebrity in America before he ever left Europe to sing at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

While some of the observations in the above paragraph seem improbable today, there was a hint of elitism in America that placed opera singers at the top of the pecking order in terms of show business prestige. Small towns in the United States had "opera houses," although opera was rarely produced in any of them. There were no film stars in those days. Radio broadcasts did not exist. People had heard of some famous sopranos such as Jenny Lind and Nellie Melba, but Caruso's voice on records made him the first international superstar created by the record industry. Caruso probably would have been famous anyway. And, yes, I admit to a bit of bias, having produced two Caruso discographies.

It may be hyperbolic to state that the world's greatest artists made records for the Victor Company and its affiliate HMV, but it is a fact that very few other record companies entered into contracts with celebrities known here and abroad. The names of the Victor artists are legendary, and many of them were the most skilled classically trained artists in the world. Furthermore, the Victor Company promoted classical music and, according to several commentators, the company set the standards and influenced, and possibly limited, the types of music people got to hear.

On the next few pages, I will describe the records as artifacts. While I do have an opinion about the musical quality of many of them, I am not a skilled music critic and will keep my opinions to myself.

Introduction

The first red label on a phonograph record was a Russian innovation. In early 1902, the Gramophone and Typewriter (G&T) branch in Russia released a 7-inch record by Nikolai Figner, an operatic tenor. It bore a red label with the words "GRAMOPHONE RECORD RED SEAL" and all other details were printed in gold. The description "Red Seal" was only used on 7-inch records and was quickly abandoned.

The home office of the Gramophone and Typewriter Company took note of how appealing the label was, and they decided to use it on records made by celebrities. The Victor Talking Machine Company also decided to use it for records by their more prestigious artists, and Victor made use of the term "Red Seal" to indicate that the records were special. They were listed in a special section in most of their catalogs over the next fifty years.

Victor produced nine "Red Seal" records in early 1903, and the company began the practice of importing stampers from G&T in that same year. The imported records were assigned to a block of catalog numbers beginning with the number 5000. These single-sided records with four-digit catalog numbers are the first that are listed in Section I of the Victor Red Seal discography and they are extremely rare. Finding a copy in good condition is especially challenging.

The assignment of catalog numbers on Victor records in the first three years of the company's existence was very simple. They started with number 1, and by the time they decided to issue a record with a red label they had reached number 2187. The decision to import stampers and to assign number 5000 to the first one to be released was a clever decision. But it was obvious that the simpler original system of assigning catalog numbers needed to be changed.

In late 1903, blocks of catalog numbers were assigned to categories of recordings. Black labels continued to be issued in numerical order for popular songs. The 5000 block of Red Seal records were renumbered into the 91000 series. Two other blocks of numbers were designated for Red Seal records. The 81000 and 85000 series indicated that the records were ten inches or twelve inches in diameter, and they featured classical artists.

A few new blocks of numbers were set aside for high-prestige foreign recordings by Nellie Melba, Adelina Patti, and Francesco Tamagno. In 1908, a few records that had originally been assigned to the black label 61000 series were upgraded to Red Seal status. There were also European imports by artists of lower prestige in the Gramophone and Typewriter catalog. The 71000 series of black label twelve-inch records was also used for the lower-grade imports from Europe and some of those were issued with red labels beginning in 1908.

A further refinement was created in 1906. The Red Seal records were divided into hierarchies. The 64000 and 74000 series with ten- and twelve-inch diameters were used for classical artists whose reputations were primarily American. The 87000 and 88000 series were set aside for world-famous artists and the company charged very high prices for records in the higher-numbered series.

It is interesting to note that the Irish tenor John McCormack was originally assigned to the 87000/88000 series. When his career as an opera singer failed, he was reassigned to the 64000/74000 series. It was the best thing that could have happened to him. The United States was at the time welcoming huge numbers of Irish immigrants, and they bought large numbers of the reasonably priced McCormack records. Because of that, his royalties equaled, and sometimes exceeded, those of Enrico Caruso. It is worth noting that Mr. McCormack did record some operatic titles, and he demonstrated exceptional skill on those recordings.

Between 1906 and 1924 there were a few other blocks of numbers assigned to Red Seal records. Recordings of duets and ensembles were assigned to the 89000 or 95000/96000 series and even higher prices were charged for those records because the company had to pay royalties to each artist.

Both Victor and the Gramophone Company refused to press double-sided red label or Red Seal records until 1924. One reason for this was the problem of assigning royalties to the artists or copyright holders on each side of a record. It is also true that the companies were making a fortune by selling the sides separately. Victor had to publish double-sided black label "popular" records starting in 1908 simply because other companies were already marketing two-sided records and they were doing so at reasonable prices. The company did reduce the prices of Red Seal records in 1919, and that decision resulted in a considerable rise in sales of the records.

The double-sided Red Seal records are described in Sections II, III, and IV of this series. When the company decided to relent and couple the titles in 1924, the first ones released were reissues of records that had previously been available as one-sided records. A few of the single-sided records continued to be listed in Victor catalogs until 1929.

Section II contains sequences of catalog numbers that had been established by the Victor Talking Machine Company for ten-inch and twelve-inch double-sided records. The records in Section III were issued by RCA Victor. RCA decided upon a new numbering system after World War II; the records had hyphenated numbers and those are listed in Section IV.

Sections V and VI contain an incomplete list of Red Seal records issued in Argentina and Brazil. I made a serious effort to find South American documents and catalogs and I was very pleased that four gentlemen (Juan Dzazopulos, Edson Ferreira, Renato D. Menare Rowe, and Rudi Sazunic) made an effort to help me, but the lists on these pages are woefully incomplete. I would welcome an opportunity to update both listings.

The Records as Artifacts

Records made before 1925 were acoustically recorded, meaning that the process was entirely mechanical and the recordings, once made, were incapable of being engineered or altered in any way. Artists stood in front of, or near, a megaphone-shaped horn and produced a recording. Some sounds simply could not be effectively recorded, and tenors and violins produced the best results. Orchestras actually consisted of about eight musicians placed at varying distances from the horn. Performers who sang duets with Caruso got to stand closer to the horn than he did. That was the extent of engineering available until microphones were employed to record sound.

Victor had some problems with excessive wear on some of their published records, especially some that were recorded in Europe with a different groove shape than that in use in America. A number of records were copied by what appears to have been a pantograph process. A stylus tracking a published record was attached by a device that etched a properly shaped groove into a new matrix. The records were marked at the nine o'clock position next to the label with the symbol S/8. There is virtually no aural difference between the original and the S/8 transcribed versions.

Victor agreed to use the Western Electric recording process in 1925 and the recordings were well received. Record buyers returned acoustic records to dealers in exchange for records made by the new process. Symphony orchestras could be recorded and a new element was introduced – the records could be modified by engineers to make them more commercially attractive. The new records had the letters "VE" stamped on them in the space next to the labels.

With the advent of electrical recording, Victor and HMV would often use two recording machines when a title was being recorded to ensure that a clean wax master was available. Both machines were connected to the same microphone and the recordings are identical. Those from the second machine were rarely processed. When the alternate copy was used, the companies marked the takes as 1A or 2A. Take 2A was identical to take 2, etc.

It is also noteworthy that Victor was able to standardize the playing speed of their recordings in 1925 and 78rpm became a universally accepted standard. However, very few Victor records were ever recorded precisely at that speed. Most play best when played slightly slower than 78rpm, but the entire process was a vast improvement over the records made before 1925.

Victrola, the record playing machine marketed by the Victor Talking Machine Company, had a device on it that allowed the person playing a record to alter the speed of the records by a fairly large range. In that way, the consumer could pitch the records themselves. Acoustic records may have been recorded at any speed between 65- and 105-rpm, and they sound best played at the exact speed at which they were recorded. A number of companies today make "variable speed" record players and provide styli that fit best in the groove of records made over 100 years ago.

Note: Well-intentioned people have been issuing old records on the internet without pitching them properly or using proper styli. A similar problem affected many early vinyl reissues which had reproductions made at 78rpm of recordings originally made at anything between 69rpm and 80rpm or higher, thereby seriously affecting both the pitch of the record and the "sound" of the singer. Serious collectors and trained musicians find this annoying and in bad taste. I decided not to list the reproductions because so many of them were so poorly done, and I could not possibly listen to or verify correct pitch on all of them.

Victor records were not pressed on vinyl until the late 1940s. For fifty years they were pressed into a compound that was primarily shellac, and the records were breakable. They did press a few records in the 1930s using a lacquer compound called Victrolac. The surface was a bit quieter, but it was not entirely successful. I shudder every time I see an antique record listed as "vinyl."

Every record in Section I of this series was one-sided. From time to time Victor did press images or printed materials on the reverse side. Record companies pressed data on the recording side of their records. These appear in the space between the label and the end on the recorded area. Included are the catalog number, a take number, a code that indicates which stamper was used to press the record, and a code that indicates which machine was used in the factory. Collectors are especially interested in the take numbers, and a few collectors are also interested in the stamper that was used to press the record.

These numbers and codes usually appear in the same location on all of Victor's records. The catalog number is at the twelve o'clock position above the label and the stamper number is very close to the stamped catalog number. The take number is at the nine o'clock position, but Victor did not start placing them there until about 1913. The entire matrix number did appear at the six o'clock position on some very early Victor records, but that practice was discontinued in about 1907. The code indicating which machine was in use was indicated at the three o'clock position and it is absolutely irrelevant.

Victor and the Gramophone Company had an agreement that His Master's Voice matrix numbers had to be stamped on each record. It makes the identification of European imports very easy for people who care about such things. The Victor Company also maintained index cards for recordings made in Europe. HMV catalog numbers and matrix numbers were listed along with the catalog numbers assigned by Victor.

Albums

The advent of microphones and electrical recording had an additional benefit. It was possible to record large groups such as symphony orchestras or choirs or choruses. Complete orchestral or operatic titles were produced. And, automatic record players made it possible to play a lengthy selection without having to manually change records every four or five minutes. The earliest automatic players would play four records, for example, before the owner would then have to remove them, turn over the four sides, and play the remainder of the composition.

The records in albums were numbered in the sequence that they should be played, and with three styles of record player Victor frequently produced three types of albums all containing the same selection. They are numbered with the prefixes M, AM, and DM.

The records in albums are listed in this discography in the sequence that they were supposed to be played on each type of machine, and that makes for some difficult reading until one understands what is going on.

The Importance of Matrix Numbers

Victor assigned a matrix number to each recording made by an artist. For over forty years it was a three-part code indicating the size of the recording, a serial number indicating the title of a recorded selection, and a take number indicating that an artist may have recorded the same serial number title more than once. These numbers were established so the company could keep track of what was being recorded. The Gramophone Company employed a variety of different methods of assigning matrix numbers, but the concept was the same – a complete matrix number describes exactly one recording, and the take numbers are especially important to collectors and researchers.

A widely circulated discography, "The Encyclopedic Discography of Victor Recordings – Pre-Matrix Series" by Ted Fagan and William R. Moran, presented a problem for me. All records have a matrix, so "pre-matrix" is a term that makes no sense. It would have made more sense to refer to the records in that book as "Johnson matrices" since the numbers listed from the year 1900 until May 1903 were assigned by Johnson before he changed the name of his company to The Victor Talking Machine Company, and before he devised a new series of matrix numbers for recordings made for that company.

A few of the pre-Victor records are listed in this discography with the notation "(JM)" to describe that they were pressed from the early matrices. (JM) is not a prefix, it is merely an indication that it was an early Johnson recording.

I am impressed that the Victor Company kept track of matrix data to the extent that an artist could record a title at the beginning of his or her career and return twenty years later and find that the same serial number would be used to identify subsequent "takes" of that title. There were no computers in the first half of the 20th century and clerical workers had to keep track of every title recorded by every artist.

In the 1940s, RCA Victor modified some of its matrix numbering conventions, but the number assigned to a specific recording remained as unique as a human fingerprint when identifying a specific recording. Part of the justification for altering the original system may have been the proliferation of RCA Victor recording studios in many cities in the United States – a decision that relieved the main office in Camden, New Jersey, of assigning numbers for each site.

Some Comments About the Discography

One final comment worth repeating about the records as artifacts is that very few of the records listed in this discography are "vinyl." In fact, almost all of them were made of a shellac compound and they are breakable. Furthermore, some of them have been damaged by excessive play with needles that only should have been used once if the company's advertising was to be believed. Experts today are convinced that the record was damaged the first time it was played. Many consumers played their records until the stylus seriously damaged the record surface because they used the same needle over and over despite the company's suggestion that a new needle be used for every record that was being played.

The reader will note that some catalog numbers in the discography are next to a column containing numbers or alphabetical characters of my invention. NR means that a record was not released. Tr. or S/8 indicates that a record was pressed from a transcribed stamper. The numerals 1 or 2, etc., indicate that more than one take was issued of a given title. The letters A and B indicate that the artist recorded the title at a second date with a significantly different matrix number because a different arrangement or accompaniment was employed but the company used the original catalog number on the new version.

It appears to be true that Victor was prepared to record preassigned titles when an artist was scheduled to appear. I have found record labels for titles that were never recorded because a session was canceled at the last minute. In effect, the company was able to advertise and ship records to dealers within days after the records were made because it seems to be the case that the labels may have already been printed. When an artist appeared in the studio, musical arrangements had been prepared and some rehearsing had already been done by the studio musicians. While it is true that some of the comments in this paragraph are assumptions, it is also true that many of the artists made a second and third take of each title in hopes that one would be "perfect." The word "perfect" actually appears in contracts agreed to by the artists.

At the end of each day, the recording engineers sent data to a clerk who would list every title and take made at the various sessions. The data were typewritten and entered into large ledgers. If a recording was approved for publication, a blue index card was created that listed the title, catalog number, take, date of the recording, and the date that the record was listed for sale in the catalog. Almost all of these ledgers and blue index cards still exist, but there are some problems for researchers.

The original index card for a single-sided record was often moved to a different file cabinet if the title was reissued with a new catalog number. Unfortunately, some of the cards seem to have disappeared for no good reason. A prominent record dealer told me that he had purchased a box full of them and he wondered what he should do with them. I urged him to send them to the Victor archive immediately.

After records were processed in the Victor labs, copies of each take were reviewed for imperfections. Some takes were rejected, but decent copies of different takes were sent to the artists for their review. Once an artist and the company approved a take, stampers were made and the records went into production. Once in a while, a second or third take would be approved, and some of them were also placed on sale. Obviously, serious collectors and scholars would want a copy of each published take.

I mentioned previously that some collectors are interested in the stamper that was used to produce a record. Victor used the letter A to indicate a pressing from the first stamper, and some collectors want first-edition "A plate" pressings. Stamper identifiers were stamped near the catalog number above the label. They are small and they are not to be confused with the A and B sides of a double-sided record. I have seen stamper identifiers such as QQQQ or 26Z on some best-selling records.

We don't know how many records could be pressed from a stamper before it started to show some wear, but it is probable that the first pressing from any fresh stamper might sound better than the final pressing from an earlier version.

There is one other limitation: Most of the domestic Victor Red Seal records were made in the United States until the late 1920s. At some point, Victor opened recording studios in Buenos Aires, Argentina; Santiago, Chile; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; and Mexico City. The Victor affiliate His Master's Voice in Canada recorded some selections in Montreal. The data describing many of these records do not seem to exist today. I listed the names of the individuals who provided the best surviving data for those records in the subtitle for this discography, and I am very appreciative of their contributions and of their passion as collectors.

Marketing and Distributing the Records

The Victor Talking Machine Company published an advertising supplement every month in which they listed all the new records that would be available in their record stores on about the 28th day of the following month. In the early years these supplements were very colorful, but over time they became less colorful but more descriptive of the records that they were advertising. They were shipped to dealers along with an order form. The dealers would display the supplements and then order copies of the records using the Western Union telegraph system to inform the home office of their needs.

At first, the records were pressed in Philadelphia and later in Camden, New Jersey, across the river from Philadelphia. The shipments were placed on trains and on boats for distribution. Trains were met at stations all over the country by men driving horse-drawn wagons, and later trucks, to haul the records to dealers, some of them located in remote areas. This aspect of the business may sound routine today, but the United States 100 years ago did not have decent highways or the means to keep roads passable in bad weather. Victor records were heavy and they were fragile. Clearly, they required special packaging and special handling before they reached their destinations.

The company also prepared catalogs at various regular intervals that contained a listing of all of its available records. They were distributed in bulk for public distribution by Victor dealers. In addition, dealers were provided with books listing records in alphabetical or numerical order. Fortunately, quite a few of the various supplements, catalogs, order forms, and dealer lists have survived. The catalogs usually had a section, often printed on red paper, in which Red Seal records were described.

The Great Depression caused some problems for RCA Victor and they cut back dramatically on the number and frequency of supplements and catalogs. In fact, performers during the early 1930s were usually limited to one take and they often were required to supply their own accompaniment because the company no longer employed full-time musicians. Fortunately, the economy improved near the end of the decade and RCA started producing quality recordings again, only to be interrupted for four years during World War II.

Alternative Catalog Numbers

Many of the HMV listings were legally reissued throughout the world with different catalog numbers. I have tried to identify as many of them as possible, but I probably missed a few. In addition, quite a few HMV recordings were released in Russia, although some of them are unquestionably transcribed piracies. Victor catalog numbers also appear in the listings of alternative catalog numbers.

Single-sided and double-sided records were pressed in Germany with Schallplatte Gramophon or Kunstler Schallplatte Gramophon labels, and those are listed in the discography with the prefixes Ger. and KSG. For some unknown reason, the Germans assigned their own set of catalog numbers to the records that were sold elsewhere with HMV catalog numbers. However, the Germans also listed the HMV number on each label and they stamped the matrix number next to the label.

For a short period of time after World War I, the German factory illegally produced records with "Opera Disc" labels using HMV and Victor stampers recorded prior to World War I. The piracies, sponsored by an American businessman, were issued with the same German catalog numbers that had been assigned before the war, and many of the Opera Disc records had labels that were glued over the pre-war Schallplatte Gramophon labels. Unfortunately, royalties were not paid to the artists and the records were sold in American stores in direct competition with Victor records. A war tribunal put an end to these illegal practices in 1923.

There were also two series of numbers that were issued in Argentina in their 66- and 766-series. Many of the Argentine records are listed in this discography, but I was unable to find complete data describing the records issued in those two series. It is curious that the Argentine company listed the records as "sello red" when the labels were silver and the information on them was printed in blue.

Quite a few of these records were reissued by such private clubs as the International Record Collectors' Club (IRCC), the American Gramophone Society (AGS), and the Historical Record Society (HRS). Many of these records were pressed by the company that owned the masters, and some of them were autographed by the artists that can be heard on them. Some of them were limited editions. Unfortunately, over time the standards for HRS and IRCC were lowered and they resorted to selling transcribed versions and even extended-play versions.

HMV and Victor also released historical records. The Victor Heritage series released in 1947-1948 was exceptional, but short-lived. The records were pressed on red vinyl from original stampers, and they were sold in gold foil envelopes. Unfortunately, the gold foil is fragile, and finding copies with the original sleeve in pristine condition is a challenge.

A recent discovery was a bit of a surprise. There were a number of records issued in Czechoslovakia after the Communists had taken over the government in that country and a number of HMV and Victor stampers were "nationalized" and pressed in the MD series. I have listed the ones that we were able to verify. They are, in all respects, excellent HMV style records, although I view them as piracies.

Acknowledgments and Personal Recollections

No discography of Victor records would be complete without including data describing records made by the Gramophone Company in Europe. Quite a few people have worked to identify records issued by both companies, and one of the most prolific was a gentleman named Alan Kelly who spent most of his life describing records with HMV labels. Alan and I became friends when I informed him that I was "stealing" his data for inclusion in my Victor discographies. He contacted me immediately and told me that I was the first person who had ever confessed to the crime. He admitted that he needed some Victor data and expressed the hope that I could be helpful

For the next fifteen years we exchanged data on an almost daily basis. When Alan died, I was contacted by a gentleman named John Milmo, who had been one of Alan's contributors in England, and we agreed to continue to complete the work of describing records issued by Victor and HMV. John's work is more detailed than that compiled by Kelly, and he corrected errors or omissions found in Kelly's work, just as somebody will do to my work someday.

Alan and John were not the only people to describe HMV records. David Mason helped me by sending data describing records manufactured in Ireland. Peter Adamson provided Mr. Milmo with a considerable amount of HMV data. John Banks made a number of suggestions and corrections that were very much appreciated. I regret that I never met or worked with some of the others. Kelly's work is in the process of being listed on the internet and it is a work in progress. It will be impressive when it is finalized.

I have been making lists of records since I heard a radio broadcast featuring records by Enrico Caruso in 1949. I became a collector the next day. In the early 1960s I assisted the curator of the Yale University record collection in the shelving of several major record collections that had been assembled by my neighbor Lawrence Witten II. Those two gentlemen taught me how to examine a record surface and how to organize a collection of records. Mr. Witten encouraged me to compile my first Caruso discography, "The Recordings of Enrico Caruso."

Recently I have enjoyed sharing memories with a gentleman named Sheldon Hoffman, whose childhood experiences were similar to my own. We listened to some of the same radio stations, and we were influenced by the classical music used as theme songs or as background music for many of the radio shows of a bygone era. Sheldon is also an excellent proofreader who generously shared corrections to ensure the accuracy of this discography.

In 2002, Allan Sutton, the founder of Mainspring Press, contacted me and asked if I would be interested in publishing an updated version of the Caruso discography. I told him that I had been updating it and could produce a manuscript very quickly. He published it almost exactly as I had typed it and as I envisioned it, including the dust jacket. He then asked me if I had any more work that could be published.

We collaborated on eleven books before he decided to retire. Every one of them has special appeal on a bookshelf. He produced them using the best materials, and he frequently added his own expertise and photographs to the introductory remarks in each book. Knowing and working with him is one of the most positive and rewarding experiences in my life. In retirement he has maintained a website and he has produced several of my discographies on that site.

When Allan Sutton retired, Samuel Brylawski and David Seubert, the editor and director, respectively, of the Discography of American Historical Recordings (DAHR), offered to post more of my work on their website. To date they have produced several of my Victor discographies online. They have done an excellent job and the online discographies look very much like those published by Mainspring Press. I am very grateful for the opportunity to share my lists. I am impressed with the DAHR website that Sam and David have created, and I am especially grateful to Sam for his encouragement, his skilled editing, and his friendship.

I especially want to single out one book that every collector of Victor records should own. It is titled “Collector’s Guide to Victor Records,” by Michael Sherman with assistance from Kurt Nauck. Images of most types of Victor labels, and a discussion about each variation, are described in great and colorful detail.

Finally, I could not have done any of this without access to the Victor Archive, which is now called the SONY Archive, in New York City. I was welcomed by the late Jack Pfeiffer, Vince Giordano, the late Mike Panico, and Tom Tierney in my visits to the Archive, and each of them was especially helpful and encouraging.

Kelly, Alan. Personal correspondence.

Alan and I began to share Victor and HMV data in 2002 and he sent me all of the data that he had compiled throughout his life in a file entitled "HMV – The Lot" shortly before his death. He had written the Preface for the Bennett books listed above, but he had never compiled lists of the records in the HMV DA/DB or IR/IRX red label series.

IMSLP – The International Music Score Library Project. A multifaceted online website that provides exceptional background data for hundreds of thousands of musical scores.

SONY Archive – New York. I made countless visits to this archive in several different locations over the past 60 years. It contains ledgers, index cards, and documents describing Victor records going back to 1901, and I was able to verify almost all of the data listed in the Victor Discography Series.

Note: Wally Butterworth, a radio personality, found a copy of Caruso's "bass aria" test pressing. RCA Victor transcribed it and assigned an iconic catalog number. They pressed vinyl copies of a double-sided ten-inch record, and Butterworth sold them privately. The story behind the recording is show business history.
